The present invention generally relates to a mechanical oscillator and more particularly to a novel oscillator formed from a stack of metallized film and plastic capacitors that is suitable for use in a miniature radio transmitter. Miniature mechanical resonant radio frequency oscillators are described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,792,469. These include a pair of electromechanical resonant elements that are maintained in frictional contact by means of a contact pressure pad. The frequency of oscillation is thus determined by the frictional coupling of the resonant elements. Such oscillators are suitable for use in low power wireless data modems because of their small size and light weight. Miniature electrostatic radio frequency oscillators of the type described in U.S. Pat. No. 4,324,091, which is hereby incorporated by reference, include a pair of opposed surfaces of different electrostatic potential. Mechanical means are provided to maintain the surfaces in frictional contact with one another. The frequency of oscillation of such oscillators is determined by the resonant frequency of the system defined by the interstices or spaces between the surfaces. The oscillator of U.S. Pat. No. 4,792,469 utilizes a mechanism for maintaining the resonant elements in frictional contact. If the mechanical oscillator is used in a radio transmitter, it should be free of mechanisms that could become operational in the presence of humidity or which might be subject to mechanical or
